Van Cortlandt...

Van Cortlandt Park is America's cross country Mecca. It is not paradise by any means. It has not the prettiest course nor the most difficult. It does not have the best facilities. It is just that it lies smack in the middle of the most populous megalopolis, in an area rich in cross-country tradition, where sponsors and those of influence have chosen to operate.

Located as it is on the fringe of New York City, Van Cortlandt is most accessible. Public transportation funnels there from every neighborhood in the city. The subways are close by. Highways and turnpikes touch the park from distant locales in neighboring states.

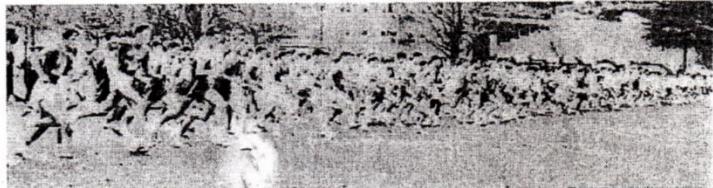

Therefore, in a given season, more runners race its trails than any other cross-country site in the nation, if not the world. There are several distinct programs that merge at "Vanny" as it is sometimes called. The biggest is for the high schools. Manhattan (and before it NYU), and Fordham sponsor meets with a combined entry in excess of 10,000... over the "time-tested" 2.5 mile course.

At the Foot Locker Northeast Qualifier the high schoolers move up to 5000m, the same route used now by women competing at the collegiate level. Essentially, it's the first 3.1 miles of the famed five mile course. When the men's college team compete, they pass through the 5,000m finish area, then another two-mile loop remains. The flats are repeated, then along the cowpath a sharp left is taken up onto the infamous Cemetery Hill, a steep, rocky incline about 4.2M into the college run. "Cemetery" -- that's the way it's referred to, just "Cemetery" -- rises about a hundred feet during its length of about 300 yards. Its peak stands 150 feet above sea level. It's a killer, alright, and the jibes abound. Runners die up there. They're dead and buried, laid to rest. Its name is so perfectly suited for the cross-country assignment that one would assume running there had some historical relationship to it. Not so.

Cemetery Hill was once known as Vault Hill. It is the family burial plot of the Van Cortlandt family, wealthy Dutch settlers after whom the park is named.

Who were the Van Cortlandts anyway? Oloff Van Cortlandt, a Dutchman, arrived in New Amsterdam in 1638 and founded a dynasty which at one time owned about 200 square miles of land. This land, formerly a Mohegan Indian hunting and planting ground, was purchased for a small sum from British settlers. Van Cortlandts' were traders, merchants and shipbuilders, and they married into such families as the Schuylers, Philipses, Livingstons, thus doubling their wealth and influence.

Oloff's son, Stephanus, was appointed mayor in 1677, the first native-born American to hold that post. He purchased a large parcel of land from the Indians for wampum that included six tobacco boxes, six earthen jugs, one small coat, nine blankets and 14 kettles. Part of this bargain included what is now the 1146 acre Van Cortlandt Park. Perhaps cross-country entry fees should be paid in tobacco boxes to commemorate the purchase.

In 1748, Oloff's grandson, Frederick, built the family mansion, which still stands near the high school starting line. Today's cowpath was really a path for cows!

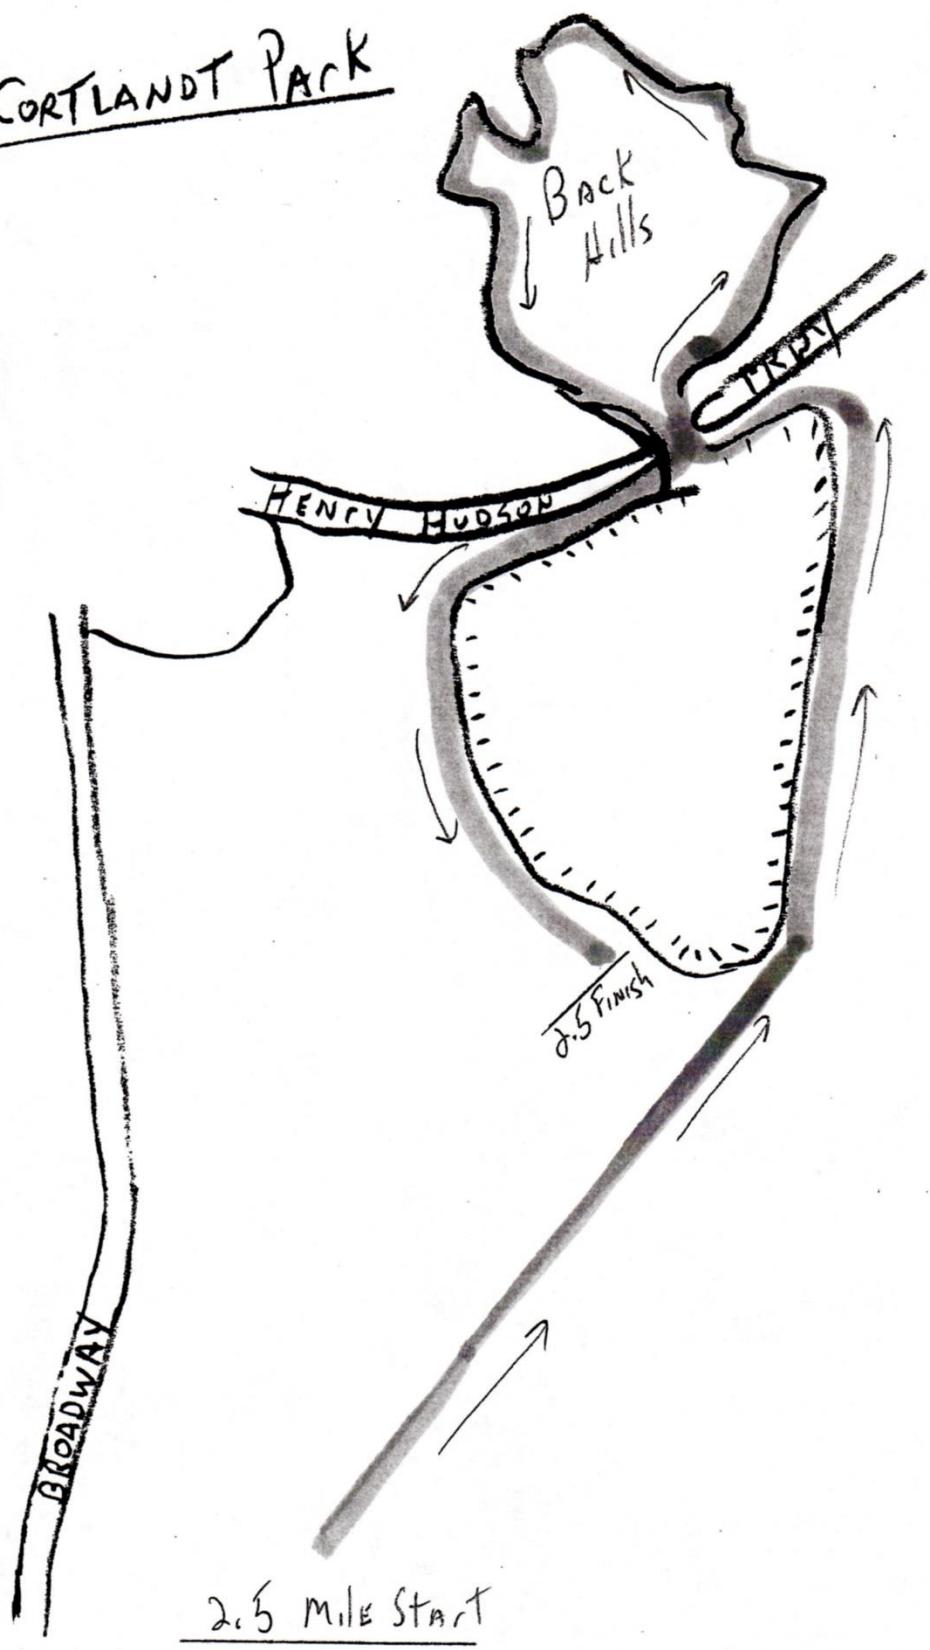

The family farmed the land and lived in the house until 1889 when they donated the property to the City of New York for use as a public park.

The Van Cortlandt mansion served briefly as a police station until 1896 when it was placed in the custody of the National Society of Colonial Dames, which now maintains it as a museum. The flats were used as camping grounds during the Revolutionary War and Washington used the Van Cortlandt estate as headquarters at various times. In 1917-18, the site was used as a combat training area, when doughboys dug trenches and hiked through the woods, preparing for war in France.

Famous names and famous races have been part of the fabric of "Vanny", whose ambiance on fall weekends is a microcosm of the entire town. There is an over-lapping tapestry; no one has the place just for himself. Soccer and football and baseball and rugby and cricket mesh on the wide-open flats, and players of different skins shout instructions in many languages. But runners are everywhere -- warming up, training, racing, going off in all directions -- or waiting at the restroom or finding their own woods, patronizing the soft-drink vendors or the delis or Burger King. Rows of cars and yellow school busses often double parked, line the finish area along Broadway. It's a place of continuous movement that embodies the spirit of New York... and what makes Van Cortlandt Park -- "Mecca". (excerpts from CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING, by Marc Bloom...)

The course at Van Cortlandt Park, with its hills, turns and rocky surface, earns the respect the legions of runners have given it over the years

Vanny Still Earns Respect

NEWSDAY 10-10-91

The scene is positively idyllic — air crisp and cool, sky blue and cloudless, hills lush and green looming behind the wide-open plain of the Parade Grounds at Van Cortlandt Park. A bevy of fall activity swirls about the huge field. Soccer players kick, rugby players scrum, Frisbee enthusiasts friz, all of it observed by serene passersby out for an autumn stroll.

But there is anguish and torment a-plenty nearby, back in those hills. One can see it on the faces of those emerging from a path in the woods in the northeast corner of the field — usually running, sometimes staggering, occasionally walking, wave after wave of masochists, otherwise known as cross-country runners, all trying to take the measure of themselves on the beast they affectionately call Vanny.

"There are cross-country venues in every locale," said Tracy Sundlun, executive director of the Metropolitan Athletics Congress, "but I'm not sure any venue has the national and international reputation Van Cortlandt has."

Loughlin track guru Ed Bowes calls it "the mecca" and "the true testing ground." Washington coach Steve Budihas says it is "challenging" and "mystical." For cross-country runners from California to Maine, the old course in the north Bronx occupies the same position it has since the 1920s — the ultimate proving ground.

"If you want to run cross-country, you haven't done it until you've done Van Cortlandt," Budihas said. "This is the godfather of cross-country."

On Saturday, another 8,300 or so runners from 309 high schools in 10 states will pay homage and test themselves at the 19th annual Manhattan College Invitational, the largest cross-country event in the country. As usual, the course will be the star of the show.

Part of its tradition is its longevity — as its devotees like to say, anybody who is anybody has run Van Cortlandt. Former New York City marathon champion Alberto Salazar ran Vanny in 1975 as a high-schooler from Wayland, Mass., and finished in 12:22.5 on the 2.5-mile course, the No. 7 performance all-time for boys. Running legend Marty Liquori is No. 8, with a 12:23.2 in 1966 while competing for Essex Catholic in New Jersey. Current NCAA indoor 3,000-meter champion John Trautman of Georgetown turned in the No. 3 performance in 1985 for Monroe-Woodbury.

The top boys' performance is the 12:15.7 turned in by Brad Hudson of North Hunterdon, N.J., in 1983. The top girls' performance came in 1986, a 14:09.1 run by Erin Keogh of Langley, Va. Luis Ostolozaga of Loughlin ran the best time ever by a city runner in 1975 when he did 12:16.4, No. 2 on the all-time list.

Equally responsible for Vanny's reputation, though, is the nature of the course itself and its degree of difficulty, a distinction best understood by those who have battled it. "It's not a manicured namby-pamby golf course. It's true cross country and it can be tough," Lynn Jennings said with obvious relish. "It's just a brutal course."

There is no one more "anybody" in the world of cross country today than Jennings, the two-time defending world champion and winner of four consecutive TAC national titles. Two of those came at Van Cortlandt.

"It's the severity of it and the fact that on one course it mixes flats, hills and pretty rocky, rooty terrain," said Jennings, who first ran Vanny in the late 1970s and set an age-group record as an underclassman at the Bromfield School in Massachusetts. "It's one of my favorites."

The 2.5-mile course, still used by the city's Catholic schools and the Manhattan College Invitational, starts on those flats with a mad dash of 400-500 yards to The Cowpath, which gently winds uphill about a mile to The Bridge. Depending on whether one is coming or going, this span across the Henry Hudson Parkway can seem like heaven or hell. Behind it lies the hills.

None of the inclines on this 1 1/4-mile loop is especially steep but they are many and frequent and the loose rock and gravel carpeting much of the loop adds to its spice. The course reaches a high point at Tar Hill, then starts its series of killer descents, a section appropriately referred to as The Rollercoaster.

"A lot of time is lost by athletes who don't consider downhill racing important," said Bowes, who also is the Manhattan College Invitational meet director. "You actually can hold yourself back out of fear, let your momentum carry you down or actually literally run down a hill."

Said Jennings: "I've won most of my races there by really jamming the downhills."

The Rollercoaster reaches its peak, so to speak, with a long sweeping curve on a steep decline penned in by a tall metal fence. On the other side is a precipitous drop. "It's scary," McClancy coach Jim Carey said. "I remember running in high school and crashing into that fence."

After recrossing The Bridge, the runners descend under The Tunnel and emerge on the often-sun-drenched flats for the final straightaway. Piece of cake, huh?

"When you get under The Tunnel and look, it can almost be demoralizing because you can't even see the finish line," said Bowes. "It's approximately 600 yards and it just never seems to come."

A strong finish there might be enough to land one a spot on the list of top 10 Vanny performances kept by many schools. If not, there is the simple satisfaction of having run the course.

"Anyone who thinks they're any good," Hunter coach Pete Wittner said, "wants to come down and test themselves."

Step right up. The Godfather is waiting.
